

I currently work as a Neurologist/Professor at the Hull York Medical School and Hull University Teaching Hospitals. I qualified from Dow Medical College, Karachi, Pakistan, in 1986 and moved to the United Kingdom following residency. I received clinical training at St James's University Hospital, Leeds, and Imperial College of Medicine, London, where I received clinical and research training in headache disorders at the Princess Margaret Migraine Clinic. As a full time clinician, I served in the field of headache for 28 years and contributed towards headache research, management and education. I served as clinical director in Neurosciences for 10 years (2002–2012) during which I completed an MBA with distinction in public sector management from the University of Hull and was awarded the postgraduate certificate in medical education (PGCME) from Hull York Medical School (2015).
